AARON E. HENRY,

Petitioner,

v.

THOMAS H. PEARSON.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF MISSISSIPPI

Petitioner prays for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of Mississippi, entered on December 16, 1963, in the above-entitled cause.

Opinion Below

The opinion of the Supreme Court of Mississippi is reported at 158 So. 2d 695 and is appended hereto as Appendix A, infra, at page 1a. The opinion in Collins v. Henry, 158 So. 2d 28, which supplements the opinion in this case is appended hereto as Appendix B, infra, at page 17a.

Jurisdiction

A judgment affirming the trial court by the Supreme Court of Mississippi was entered on December 16, 1963. A Suggestion of Error on behalf of petitioner was overruled on January 27, 1964. Jurisdiction to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of Mississippi is granted to this Court under the provisions of Title 28, United States Code, § 1257(3).

Questions Presented

1. May the State of Mississippi, consistent with the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech, press and assembly, implement a rule of law whereby criticism of the official conduct of a public official is libelous per se and impose damages of a punitive nature?

2. Has the state afforded due process of law and a fair and impartial hearing by affirming a judgment for damages in the amount of $25,000, the precise amount demanded in the complaint, in the absence of any evidence of monetary or societal damage to respondent?

Statement

1. Prior Proceedings.

Petitioner was tried in the Circuit Court of Coahoma County on a complaint alleging libel per se and demanding damages of $25,000. After trial, an adverse verdict in the amount of $25,000 was returned by the jury which retired for approximately 33 minutes (R. 173; 174). On appeal to the Supreme Court of Mississippi, the judgment was affirmed on December 16, 1963 and a Suggestion of Error filed with supporting brief was overruled on January 27, 1964 (R. 210; 213). On April 15, 1964, this Court granted a motion to extend from April 26, 1964 to May 15, 1964, the time for filing this petition.

2. Evidence Presented.

Petitioner is a pharmacist and a resident of Clarksdale, Coahoma County, Mississippi (R. 38). He is president of the Coahoma County Branch and of the Mississippi State Conference of Branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (R. 25; 118D-118H; 132); individually and as a part of his organizational affiliations, he is an active fighter for and advocate of civil rights for Negroes generally, and specifically in the State of Mississippi (R. 55-56; 132; 133-135; 149; 152; 170).

On March 3, 1962, petitioner was arrested at his home by Clarksdale Chief of Police, Benford Collins, respondent in the companion case, Henry v. Collins, Case No. ——, petition filed herewith, for the misdemeanor of disorderly conduct which allegedly occurred in Bolivar County, the county adjacent to that of petitioner's residence (R. 80; 85; 154).

Despite the fact that the alleged offense occurred out of his jurisdiction, respondent conducted the investigation in the local jail in Clarksdale to which petitioner had been brought by Chief of Police, Collins (R. 86; 140). There was much official interest in Coahoma County in petitioner's arrest. The arrest was made by Collins despite the availability of other officers in the vicinity of petitioner's residence (R. 82). Although only a misdemeanor was charged, the Mayor of Clarksdale proceeded to the local jail on a Saturday evening, an admittedly rare occurrence, and questioned the complaining witness (R. 93-94). Respondent was summoned by Collins who after preliminary interrogation, went to his office for a tape recorder and recorded statements from petitioner, his wife and a business associate (R. 125; 139-140). Petitioner remained in the custody of respondent and Collins for interrogation, after which he was transferred to Bolivar County officials and incarcerated overnight in a Bolivar County jail (R. 39; 64; 155). Subsequently, petitioner learned that he was charged with a morals offense occurring in Bolivar County and involving an 18-year old white youth (R. 38; 154). Disposition of the criminal charge by the courts of Mississippi is the subject matter of Henry v. Mississippi, Case No. 539, petition for certiorari granted by this Court on February 17, 1964.

On March 5, 1962, based upon these events, petitioner made a formal complaint to the Department of Justice claiming an invasion of his civil rights and requested an investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (R. 53).

Representatives of various news media called regarding the complaint (R. 44). Following conversations with either a United Press International or Associated Press employee, the wire services released news stories which appeared on March 7, 1962, with several minor variations, in the Clarksdale Press Register, and in newspapers in Vicksburg, Meridian, Gulfport, Corinth and Greenville, all communities in Mississippi (R. 44-45; 116½; 118B-118H). Evidence of publication is limited to these areas. These stories are appended hereto as Appendix C, infra, at page 36a. Although these newspaper reports contained additional statements attributed to petitioner concerning his complaint to the Justice Department, respondent relied only upon the following paragraph:

> Henry called the arrest 'a diabolical plot cooked up' by the Coahoma County prosecutor, Thomas H. Pearson and Collins . . .

On March 7, 1962, petitioner mailed a letter dated March 6th, to the Chief of Police of Cleveland, Bolivar County, Mississippi, who exhibited it to two officials (R. 119-120); consequently, knowledge of the contents was limited until the trial of this cause. The letter is appended hereto, infra, as Appendix D, at page 44a.

Although there was testimony that an affidavit was signed by the complaining witness on March 3, the date of petitioner's arrest, no such affidavit has ever been produced. Petitioner was tried and convicted for disturbing the peace upon an affidavit dated March 14, 1962, signed by the Bolivar County Attorney (R. 60; 156-157). Chief of Police Collins testified that while he was on traffic duty in Clarksdale, he heard a radio call for identification of an automobile and later that a warrant had issued for petitioner's arrest (R. 69-70). He advised police headquarters to hold the warrant until he could personally arrest petitioner (R. 71; 82).

Respondent testified that as a private practitioner, Negroes comprise part of his clientele and that he intends to run again for the office of County Attorney (R. 128; 150). Although the newspaper story was discussed with some of respondent's clients and social friends there is no evidence that the story was believed to be true by anyone (R. 129; 130-131).

A former district attorney of Greenwood, Mississippi, testified that in his opinion a "charge that a county attorney . . . had 'concocted a diabolical plot to bring about the arrest of a citizen on a morals charge' would . . . impute a crime to the county attorney" and "lower him in the public's esteem and confidence" (R. 121-122). The record is barren of evidence that any segment of the general public believed that charges had been leveled against respondent or that the statement was factual; conversely, there is evidence that the story was disbelieved (R. 130). Not only has there been no decline in respondent's Negro clientele but recognition has been accorded him by his professional colleagues through his appointment to the Criminal Law Section of the Mississippi State Bar Association (R. 131; 172). There was undisputed testimony that in view of community hostility toward the NAACP, its officers and members and all civil rights workers in Mississippi, the newspaper stories, if believed, could only enhance respondent professionally and politically (R. 144; 168-169; 190).

On prior occasions, respondent has harassed and verbally abused petitioner because of his civil rights activities. At respondent's direction, Collins arrested petitioner prior to the filing of an authorizing complaint, for conspiracy to restrain trade. The charge was based upon petitioner's participation in a selective buying campaign protesting segregation practices by Clarksdale businessmen (R. 132-136; 153).

3. Procedure Below: Preservation of Federal Questions.

On April 25, 1962, the complaint herein was filed charging petitioner with libel of respondent in his official capacity as County Attorney, in a letter and in newspaper stories, and demanding damages in the amount of $25,000 (R. 4-18). Petitioner denied the allegations of the complaint and a motion to amend his answer to aver the defense of qualified privilege by way of fair comment was denied at the trial (R. 19-20; 173).

At the termination of respondent's case, petitioner moved for a directed verdict on the grounds that the rendition of an adverse verdict would be unsupported by evidence, and in violation of petitioner's right to freedom of speech and a deprivation of his rights under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment (R. 141). This motion was overruled (R. 141). The verdict returned by the jury was general and did not specify the type of damages awarded nor was any finding of malice made. Petitioner's motion for a new trial made at the conclusion of respondent's case was similarly overruled (R. 141; 179). The latter motion stated that the verdict deprived petitioner of his right to freedom of speech guaranteed by the First Amendment and was contrary to the overwhelming weight of evidence; and excessive damages were a deprivation of due process required by the Fourteenth Amendment (R. 178).

An Assignment of Error was filed in the Supreme Court of Mississippi preserving all points raised below both by motion and by objection (R. 191). On December 16, 1963, the Supreme Court of Mississippi released its opinion affirming the judgment below. It quoted from and adopted the opinion in Collins v. Henry, 158 So. 2d 28 (App. 17a), in which the court found that the phrase "diabolical plot cooked up" charged respondent with a crime and was, therefore, libelous per se and that under the common law rule of libel per se applicable in that state, malice need not be established to sustain an award of punitive damages. Although the court stated that malice was actually established in this case, a reading of the opinion confirms that this finding was based upon the language attributed to petitioner and not upon any evidence relating to petitioner's state of mind.

On January 17, 1964, petitioner filed a Suggestion of Error to the opinion and in further exposition of the violation of petitioner's rights to due process of law, to equal protection of the law, to a fair and impartial hearing and to freedom from interference with First Amendment rights of speech and association and to constitutional insulation from state action, which, in effect, enforces segregation policies and practices (R. 211-212). The Suggestion of Error was overruled on January 27, 1964 (R. 213).

Reasons for Allowance of the Writ

1. The decision of the court below is in conflict with principles enunciated in New York Times v. Sullivan, — U. S. — (32 U. S. Law Week 4184) decided by this Court on March 9, 1964. Under the ratio decedendi of that case a court may not, consistent with First Amendment requirements, award or sanction damages for libel to public officials for criticism of their official conduct unless actual malice is in fact shown. Such an award is state action within the prohibition of the Fourteenth Amendment. Bridges v. California, 314 U. S. 252; Shelley v. Kramer, 334 U. S. 1; Hurd v. Hodge, 334 U. S. 24; Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U. S. 249; Wood v. Georgia, 370 U. S. 375.

The court below determined that the statement attributed to petitioner fell within the common law definition of libel per se applicable in Mississippi, and that the privilege usually accorded criticism of public officials for their official conduct was insufficient to negate liability. It held that under Mississippi law, any language which is such as to "... produce hatred, contempt and ridicule, and to destroy credibility and degrade and lessen confidence and respect ... in the community ... could only spring from wilfulness and malice or an utter disregard of all moral and ethical action of human conduct" and is "therefore libelous per se." (Emphasis supplied) (App. 14a).

The finding of malice by the court below does not distinguish this case from New York Times v. Sullivan, supra since malice was inferred from the nature of the words used and not from any evidence reflected in the record. By a process of circuitous reasoning, the court found that petitioner was guilty of libel per se, because his statement tended to produce hatred, contempt and ridicule and to destroy credibility of and confidence in respondent, and because the statement tended to produce this result, actual malice existed (App. 13a-14a; 23a). Application of this principle no more meets constitutional requirements than did reliance on the state statute and the presumption of damages by the Supreme Court of Alabama in Sullivan, since it merely restates, as the basis for the finding, the criteria of libel per se, and adheres to the consequent presumption of damages.

The court below, as did the Alabama court in Sullivan, regarded proof of truth as the only acceptable defense to respondent's allegations (App. 13a; 33a). Strict insistence that insulation from money damages can be affected only by proving the accuracy of a statement criticizing the public acts of public officials was condemned as insufficient under constitutional standards in the Sullivan case. There, this Court stated:

> That erroneous statement is inevitable in free debate, and that it must be protected if the freedoms of expression are to have the "breathing space" that they "need ... to survive," NAACP v. Button, 371 U. S. 415, 433, was also recognized by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in Sweeney v. Patterson, 128 F. 2d 457, 458 (1942).

The Mississippi court held that only by establishing that respondent was a "perjurer and had suborned others to perjure themselves" could petitioner escape liability (App. 14a). By interposing its interpretation of petitioner's statement, the Supreme Court of Mississippi went further than that of Alabama which held that the only defense was to persuade a jury to the truth of all particulars stated.

Petitioner's motion to amend the pleadings to include the defense of privilege was denied by the trial court. The making of this motion insulates this case from the rule applied in Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U. S. 25, wherein this Court refused to consider a defense of "fair comment" or privilege since it had not been presented to the courts below. Denial of petitioner's motion was an abuse of discretion and violated his constitutional rights as declared by this Court in Sullivan. Just as the state may not, through application of a rule of law, circumscribe comment on public officials, it may not arbitrarily apply rules of practice and procedure to defeat constitutional rights. Williams v. Georgia, 349 U. S. 375; Urie v. Thompson, 337 U. S. 163; Lawrence v. State Tax Comm., 286 U. S. 276, 282; Broad River Power Co. v. So. Carolina, 281 U. S. 537; New York Central v. N. Y. and Pa. Co., 271 U. S. 124; Ward v. Love County, 253 U. S. 17; Davis v. Wechsler, 263 U. S. 22, 24; Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust Co. v. Hill, 281 U. S. 673; Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U. S. 226.

Normally, the right to amend pleadings at the trial, or at the end of the trial to conform to the evidence, is liberally allowed. This rule is applied when the defense of privilege is omitted from the pleadings; Lee v. W. E. Fuetterer Battery & Supplies Co., 323 Mo. 1204, 23 S. W. 2d 45; Broking v. Phoenix Newspapers, 76 Ariz. 334, 264 P. 2d 413. Moreover, this rule is usually applied in Mississippi. Bigner v. Hodges, 82 Miss. 215, 33 So. 980. See also Jarnigan v. Fleming, 43 Miss. 710, cited with approval by the court below.

Because of its roots in the Bill of Rights, freedom of speech is more comprehensive than other rights embraced within the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U. S. 624, this Court observed:

> In weighing arguments of the parties it is important to distinguish between the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment as an instrument for transmitting the principles of the First Amendment and those cases in which it is applied for its own sake. The test of legislation which collides with the Fourteenth Amendment, because it also collides with the principles of the First, is much more definite than the test when only the Fourteenth is involved. Much of the vagueness of the due process clause disappears when the specific prohibitions of the First become its standard. The right of a State to regulate, for example, a public utility may well include, so far as the due process test is concerned, power to impose all of the restrictions which a legislature may have a 'rational basis' for adopting. But freedoms of speech and of press, of assembly, and of worship may not be infringed on such slender grounds.

The privilege accorded criticism of the government and public officials or comment on matters of public concern must extend the area of lawful comment well beyond that delineated for criticism of the private individual. Wide latitude is necessary in determining whether a given statement is within the constitutionally acceptable area since free political discussion which will insure the reponsiveness of government to the will of the populace is essential to a free society and to social growth. See De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353; Roth v. United States, 354 U. S. 476, 484.

Although this Court has held that libel, like obscenity, is not within the scope of the First Amendment, that constitutional provision comprehends the right to exaggerate, to disseminate unpopular ideas, and must encompass the right to posture criticism of official conduct of a governmental official upon the perimeter of offensiveness or even within the ambit of the insulting. See, Bridges v. California, supra, Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U. S. 1; Pennekamp v. Florida, 328 U. S. 331.

Petitioner questioned the circumstances surrounding his arrest and the court below held that by doing so, he had accused respondent of the commission of a crime and was, a fortiori, guilty of libel. Assuming that a challenge of the authority for official action is reasonably amenable to that construction, the basic issue is whether the First Amendment right to criticize official action is operable within an area limited by the nature of the action criticized.

Criticism of official conduct must concern professional acts, duties and obligations. A law enforcement agent is concerned with the application and enforcement of laws. Exception to the performance of his official acts must involve his professional conduct, hence it is inescapable that any expression of profound disapproval with his methods of operation will reflect on him professionally. Accordingly, the rule of law applied by the court below renders any attempt to take issue with official action vulnerable to a successful libel action and to liability for consequent money damages. If the First Amendment freedom to speak is to fulfill the purpose for which it was adopted, it must protect the right of the private citizen to openly and vocally challenge the performance of official actions and to impute to public officials less than commendable motives.

In contempt proceedings precipitated by editorial or other comments, the scope of the constitutional right of free speech, freedom to express opinions of on judicial action or to criticize public officials is determined by weighing the right against the danger of the obstruction of justice. See Bridges v. California, supra; Pennekamp v. Florida, supra. A similar test which weighs the danger, that under the circumstances involved, a statement will produce hatred, ridicule and contempt must govern the permissible scope of criticism of the official acts of public officials if the right to dissent and to protest in the area of controversial matters of public concern is to be adequately protected by the First Amendment. And to whatever extent this thesis conflicts with the rationale of Beauharnais v. Illinois, supra, that case should be limited.

2. The foregoing presumes arguendo that the language quoted in the newspapers and attributed to petitioner is libelous in fact. Implicit in ascertaining the existence of libel is whether the ordinary person would be likely to understand the statement as an expression of the opinion of the speaker or writer or as a direct statement of existing fact. See Harper, Torts, note 14 at p. 543. Statements challenged as libelous must be judged in relation to the time, the surrounding circumstances and the understanding of the publisher, the public and the community where published. Massee v. Williams, 207 Fed. 222 (6th Cir. 1913); Sweeney v. Schenectady Union Pub. Co., 122 F. 2d 288 (2nd Cir. 1941); Spanel v. Pegler, 160 F. 2d 619 (7th Cir. 1947); Holden v. American News Co., 52 F. Supp. 24 (E.D. Wash. 1943), affd. 144 F. 2d 249 (9th Cir. 1944). Tidmore v. Mills, 32 So. 2d 769. Petitioner's civil rights advocacy is notorious in the white community in Mississippi, which is engaged in an active and growing battle over racial segregation The record is devoid of evidence that any person or group understood the statement attributed to petitioner as an accusation damaging to respondent monetarily or otherwise. In the State of Mississippi, it is libelous per se to call a white person a Negro. Natchez Times Pub. Co. v. Dunigan, 221 Miss. 320, 70 So. 2d 681. Accordingly, it is unlikely that, under any circumstances, criticism of a public official by a known Negro civil rights activist, could fall within a definition of libel.

3. These actions were brought by public officials of a southern state conceived in segregation and dedicated to the principle that it shall be preserved.[1] See United States v. City of Jackson, 318 F. 2d 1, (5th Cir. 1963); Bailey v. Patterson, 323 F. 2d 201 (5th Cir. 1963); and Meredith v. Fair, 298 F. 2d 696, (5th Cir. 1962), where this fact was judicially noticed by the court.

Significantly, although five newspapers printed petitioner's statement and two wire services disseminated similar stories, only petitioner was sued for libel. Previously respondent has used legal process to terminate expressions of protest against and satiation with Mississippi's racial practices on the part of petitioner and his associates.[2] This Court is aware of the racial climate in the [2] In January, 1962, petitioner was charged with violation of a "restraint of trade" statute for participating in a "protest" selective buying campaign. State v. Henry, No. 5245, now pending in the County Court of Coahoma County. Subsequent to the morals charge and these ensuing libel actions, petitioner's wife was discharged from the county school system. The Superintendent testified that her discharge was due to the morals charge, the libel actions and that he had "heard" that an action for fraudulent conveyance of property would soon be brought against her. Noelle Henry v. Coahoma County Board of Education, — F. Supp. — (8 Race Rel. Rep. 1480, decided December 23, 1963). What the Superintendent heard was prophetic and on May 15, 1962, Thomas Pearson filed a complaint for fraudulent conveyance against petitioner's wife. Pearson v. Henry, No. 13206, Chancery Court of Coahoma County, Mississippi. See also pages 19-21 of the petition for writ of certiorari filed in Henry v. Mississippi, Case No. 539. It is significant that these events and petitioner's arrests by Police Chief Collins on the charge of "parading without a permit," for picketing in peaceful demonstrations are termed "several other clashes with the law" by the court below (App. 20a).

South and of the use of criminal and civil process to maintain a segregated society. As was stated in NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U. S. 449, at p. 460:

> It is beyond debate that freedom to engage in association for the advancement of beliefs and ideas is an inseparable aspect of the "liberty" assured by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, which embraces freedom of speech . . . Of course, it is immaterial whether the beliefs sought to be advanced by association pertain to political, economic, religious or cultural matters, and state action which may have the effect of curtailing the freedom to associate is subject to the closest scrutiny.

and at p. 461:

> The governmental action challenged may appear to be totally unrelated to protected liberties. (Emphasis supplied)

Time and the evolution of the law have taught that the more primitive methods of stifling the voices of dissent and discontent with racial segregation have adverse national and international repercussions and are rarely tolerated by the appellate courts. As a result, more sophisticated means are utilized. There is little risk in resort to legal process and to jury trials in the rural south when whites are pitted against Negroes. Litigation, then, offers a reasonable means to achieve the desired result.

The Fourteenth Amendment prohibits "state action" and it is well settled that a state acts through its instrumentalities; its executive, judicial and legislative branches. Shelley v. Kramer, supra; Monroe v. Pape, 365 U. S. 167. It acts no less through its agents and employees. Peterson v. City of Greenville, 373 U. S. 244; Lombard v. Louisiana, 373 U. S. 267. It must follow that actions which offend this constitutional prohibition binding on the state can be no less proscribed when disguised as libel suits. Constitutional rights may not be nullified by evasive schemes whether attempted "ingeniously or ingenuously." See Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U. S. 1; Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 364 U. S. 339; Smith v. Allwright, 321 U. S. 649.

4. The important issues here raised which demand resolution by this Court can not be minimized by labeling this case a private libel action. The court below has allowed the civil charge of libel to become a device for the suppression of criticism of the administrators of government.

The essential issue is the right of the oppressed individual to express dissatisfaction with and a lack of confidence in public officials who have conducted their offices to the fundamental disadvantage of citizens who have voiced disapproval with accepted traditions.

The struggle of the Negro for recognition of his civil rights has reached a new peak of activity, bringing forth strong declarations and denunciations from both sides of the fray. Statements, claims, disclaimers and accusations have taken vehement form as passions are released and both government and those who would change governments collide in the arena of opinion. Foreclosure of the right to criticize or even condemn the government and its officials strikes at the very heart of a democratic society. Repeatedly, this Court has recognized the primacy of unfettered discussion and debate on the issues of government, De Jonge v. Oregon, supra.

Transmutation of libel into an instrument to restrain and render mute criticism of the government and its administrators, destroys those liberties which the First Amendment was designed to protect.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons hereinabove stated, it is respectfully submitted that this petition for writ of certiorari be granted.

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF MISSISSIPPI

No. 42,758

vs.

THOMAS H. PEARSON..

KYLE, Justice:

This case is before us on appeal by Aaron E. Henry, defendant in the court below, from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Coahoma County rendered in favor of Thomas H. Pearson, plaintiff, in an action for damages for libel. The case is a companion case to the case of Henry v. Collins, No. 42,759, which was decided by this Court on December 2, 1963 (— So. 2d —).

The plaintiff's action for libel was based on a letter written by the defendant to W. C. Norwood, the deputy sheriff of Bolivar County, containing references to the plaintiff, who was county attorney of Coahoma County, and a statement communicated by the defendant to Lloyd B. Jeffers, a news reporter in the employ of United Press International news agency, under circumstances said to insure its being printed in those newspapers in Mississippi which subscribed to its service, and a statement communicated by the defendant to Van H. Savell, a news reporter in the employ of the Associated Press, under circumstances said to insure its being published in those newspapers in Mississippi which were members of the Associated Press.

The letter written by the defendant to W. C. Norwood, deputy sheriff of Bolivar County, was dated March 6, 1963. In his letter the writer thanked the deputy sheriff for the fair manner in which he was treated while he was in custody as a prisoner on Saturday night, March 3, 1962. The writer then stated in his letter to Norwood the following:

> "You will probably see in print where I have filed a complaint with the Justice Department charging a denial of Civil Rights in the arrest itself. The complaint states that in my opinion the charge under which I was arrested was born in the minds of the County Attorney and the Chief of Police of my town due to my activity in the area of desegregation, registering and voting and politics as I serve on the committee of the Trammel to Congress Committee, sponsoring a Negro for Congress. Also these two men are against me due to my activity in suggesting to Negroes that we all trade in those stores that employ us and hire us above the menial level.
> "What I want to be clearly understood that I am not charging nor am I of the opinion that you nor any other authority of Bolivar County is a party to this diabolical plot. I do think that the two men above mentioned has schemed with some person to make the charge in Bolivar County and unknowingly Bolivar County is being used to some extent as a party in the Racial difficulties of Coahoma County . . . ."

The statement which was communicated by the defendant to Lloyd B. Jeffers, a news reporter in the employ of U.P.I. and which was sent by U.P.I. to the Clarksdale Press-Register, The Daily Corinthian, The Delta Democrat-Times, and The Meridian Star, and published by each of those newspapers in its edition of Wednesday, March 7, 1962, is as follows:

> "Clarksdale, Miss. (UPI)—Aaron Henry, state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said Tuesday night he had asked the FBI to investigate his arrest on Saturday on a morals charge.
> "Henry issued a statement saying he had filed a formal complaint with the Justice Department charging his civil rights had been violated by officers from nearby Bolivar County and Clarksdale.
> "He was arrested Saturday night by Police Chief Ben Collins on a Bolivar County warrant charging him with disturbing the peace by allegedly making immoral advances to an 18-year-old white youth.
>
> "Henry called the arrest 'a diabolical plot cooked up' by the Coahoma County prosecutor, Thomas H. Pearson, and Collins * * *."

The statement which was communicated by the defendant Henry to Van H. Savell, news reporter in the employ of the Associated Press, and incorporated in a news item which was sent by the A.P. to the Vicksburg Evening Post and The Biloxi-Gulfport Daily Herald, and published in each of those newspapers on March 7, 1962, was substantially the same as that given to the representative of the U.P.I.

The plaintiff filed his declaration on April 25, 1962, and in his declaration charged that the statements made by the defendant in his letter to W. C. Norwood, deputy sheriff of Bolivar County, dated March 6, 1962, and the statements communicated to the news reporters of United Press International and the Associated Press in the City of Jackson concerning the plaintiff were false, defamatory and libelous, and the publications thereof by the defendant were unprivileged, and directly, without qualification, accused the plaintiff of misconduct and malfeasance in office as the county prosecuting attorney of Coahoma County, and unequivocally attributed unto the plaintiff as an attorney at law a gross violation of the Code of Ethics of the legal profession; and that the natural and proximate consequences of said publications had caused and would necessarily thereafter cause injury to the plaintiff in his personal, social, official, business and professional life, thereby exposing him to public hatred, contempt and ridicule, and causing irreparable damage and injury to his reputation and good standing in the community. The plaintiff therefore demanded judgment for damages in the amount of $25,000. Copies of the letter addressed to Mr. Norwood, deputy sheriff of Bolivar County, and the above mentioned news releases of the U.P.I. and A.P. dated March 6, 1962, and published in the above mentioned newspapers, were attached as exhibits to the plaintiff's declaration.

The defendant in his answer admitted that he wrote the letter which was addressed to W. C. Norwood, deputy sheriff of Bolivar County, but denied that the letter was maliciously prepared and further denied that it was defamatory and libelous. The defendant also denied that he had malicously prepared and published of and concerning the plaintiff false statements by deliberately communicating the same to the officers of the U.P.I. and the A.P. in Jackson, as alleged in the plaintiff's declaration. The defendant denied that he had communicated to the U.P.I. and A.P. false defamatory and libelous statements; and the defendant denied that he had caused to be published any unprivileged publications, which accused the plaintiff of misconduct and malfeasance in office, or which attributed to the plaintiff, as an attorney at law, a gross violation of the Code of Ethics of the legal profession; and the defendant further denied that, as a natural and proximate consequence of any statements published by him, injury had been caused or would thereafter be caused to the plaintiff in his personal, social, official, business and professional life.

The case was tried before a jury at the July 1962 term of the court; and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $25,000. The court overruled the defendant's motion for a new trial, and a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant for the amount stated in the verdict of the jury. From that judgment the defendant has prosecuted this appeal.

The appellant has assigned and argued four points as grounds for reversal of the judgment of the lower court: (1) That the court erred in overruling the defendant's challenge of the juror, L. R. Allen, for cause; (2) that the court erred in overruling the defendant's motion for a directed verdict at the close of the plaintiff's case; (3) that the court erred in overruling the defendant's motion to amend the answer so as to allege the defense of qualified privilege by reason of "fair comment;" and (4) that the court erred in denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

In view of the nature of the questions presented for our decision on this appeal, it is necessary that we give a brief summary of the evidence upon which the jury based its verdict. We shall not undertake to review in detail the testimony of each of the witnesses who testified concerning the events which led up to the appellant's arrest by the Chief of Police of the City of Clarksdale on a warrant isued by the Bolivar County justice of the peace, or the testimony of the news reporters of the U.P.I. and the A.P., who testified concerning the telephone calls which the appellant made to them on March 6, and the statements read by the appellant to them concerning his arrest on the disorderly conduct charge which he characterized as a "diabolical plot cooked up by the county prosecutor, Thomas H. Pearson, and Collins." The evidence relating to the appellant's arrest by the Chief of Police of the City of Clarksdale on the warrant issued by the Bolivar County authorities on March 3, 1962, and the evidence relating to the telephone conversations which the appellant had with the representatives of the news agencies on March 6, 1962, which resulted in the publication of the appellant's statements in the Clarksdale Press Register, the Biloxi-Gulfport Daily Herald, The Daily Corinthian, The Delta Democrat Times, and the Vicksburg Evening Post, has been clearly summarized in the opinion of Judge Lee in the Collins case; and a restatement of the evidence on those points need not be made by us in this opinion.

Other parts of the testimony which are directly applicable to the issues presented for our consideration on this appeal may be summarized as follows:

The appellant Aaron E. Henry, who was called to testify as an adverse witness by the plaintiff, admitted that he had written the letter referred to in the pleadings, addressed to W. C. Norwood, Deputy Sheriff of Bolivar County, and dated March 6, 1962, and had mailed the letter to Norwood at Cleveland, Miss. The appellant also stated that, on March 6, 1962, he returned telephone calls and gave statements concerning his arrest to representatives of the U.P.I. and A.P. news agencies at Jackson, Mississippi; that one of the news agencies had called him on the telephone about a report that he had made a statement to the Federal Bureau of Investigation concerning his arrest; and after finding out there was nothing further the Justice Department wanted concerning the report, he discussed the report which he had made to the F.B.I. with the representatives of the news agencies. The appellant was asked to read the statement published by the U.P.I. under date of March 6, 1962, and was then asked to state whether he gave that statement to the representative of the U.P.I. His answer was, "The statement was written—some of it, was taken out of context, but not all of it." He admitted that he told the representative of the U.P.I. that he had been arrested on the morals charge and there was no basis for it, and "that I thought it was a scheme to degrade me, and the words 'diabolical plot' were developed as he and I discussed it." He stated that he did not recall whether he said "diabolical plot" or just how it came about, but the words "diabolical plot" were not included in the statement that he filed with the F.B.I.

The appellant was then asked the following questions and gave the following answers: "Q. * * * Didn't you tell the representative of the U.P.I., who happened to be Mr. Lloyd Jeffers, in that conversation that I referred to, that 'your arrest was a diabolical plot cooked up by the Coahoma County Prosecutor, Thomas H. Pearson, and Chief of Police Ben Collins'? A. I am saying that I don't know whether I talked to Mr. Jeffers at all, or no. Q. Well, whoever you talked to, did you make that statement to them? A. No. The 'diabolical plot' phrase grew out of as much his suggestion as it was mine. Q. Well, did you have any part in the description of it as 'a diabolical plot'? 'Cooked up by Mr. Pearson and Mr. Collins'? A. I don't recall the phrase 'cooked up' at all, but I do recall that as we discussed this thing, that the word 'diabolical' was used, but I don't recall whether the word 'plot' was used or not. Q. Were they used by you? A. They were used in the discussion of it with him."

Similar answers were given to questions propounded by the plaintiff's attorney concerning the statement published by the Associated Press. The appellant admitted that he had used the words "diabolical plot" in his letter to Mr. Norwood dated March 6, 1962. He stated that he was talking about the chief of police and county prosecuting attorney, whoever they happened to be.

Manuel Nassar, Deputy Sheriff of Bolivar County, and deputy marshal for the Town of Shelby, testified concerning the complaint made by Sterling Lee Eilert before a justice of the peace in the Town of Shelby around 5:00 P.M. on March 3, 1962, and the issuance of the warrant for the arrest of Aaron E. Henry on a disorderly conduct charge.

Ben C. Collins, chief of the police department of the City of Clarksdale, testified that he first became aware of the fact that a warrant had been issued for the arrest of Henry when he heard the Shelby Police Department call the Clarksdale Police Department and inform the Clarksdale Police Department that a warrant had been issued by the Bolivar County Justice of the peace for the arrest of Henry. He got the news over the radar machine, and he called officer Henry Petty and directed him to be on the lookout for Henry, and if he saw Henry's car to keep him under surveillance until a warrant could be sent to Clarksdale. He also instructed the desk sergeant to call Shelby and advise them to send the warrant to Clarksdale and the Clarksdale Police Department would try to locate the appellant. Collins stated that at that time he did not know the nature of the charge which had been made against Henry; but soon thereafter the warrant for Henry's arrest was received, and Collins instructed the desk sergeant to call Officer Petty and have him stand by until he could bring the warrant over and make the arrest. Collins stated that up to that time he had not discussed the warrant with Mr. Pearson, the county attorney, and so far as he knew, the county attorney knew nothing about his activities in the matter, Collins took the warrant and made the arrest at the appellant's home. The appellant asked what the charge was, and Collins told him that the warrant stated that the charge was "disorderly conduct." The appellant then read the warrant. Collins stated that, on the way back to the jail, before he locked the appellant up, he called the police department and directed that the Bolivar County authorities be notified immediately that the appellant was in custody and to send officers for him.

Collins stated that, when he arrived at the police headquarters, the desk sergeant told him that the mayor wanted to talk to him on the telephone. Collins called the mayor, and the mayor came down to the city hall. Collins told the mayor about the warrant which had been issued by the Bolivar County justice of the peace, and the appellant's arrest. Collins did not know whether the offense, if any, had been committed across the county line in Bolivar County or in Coahoma County. The mayor advised Collins to call the county attorney, and ask him to come to the city jail. The county attorney was called on the telephone and came to the city jail. Collins was asked whether Mr. Pearson at any time prior to the arrest ever discussed the matter with him, "or did you engage in a plot with him." His answer was, "None whatever." He stated that neither he nor Pearson knew anything about the matter until after the affidavit had been made against the appellant in Bolivar County and a warranf had been issued for the appellant's arrest. Collins stated that the reason he made the arrest personally was because the appellant had been arrested before, and every time he was arrested he always hollered "persecution", and Collins wanted to make the arrest himself to make sure that there was no such thing as persecution involved in the case.

W. Kincade, Mayor of the City of Clarksdale, testified that he received information about the arrest of Henry some time before dark; that he went to the city jail and interrogated the white boy, Sterling Lee Eilert, and he then decided that it was necessary to call the county attorney, for the reason that the charge against Aaron was not a charge of the city. He therefore directed the chief of police to call the county attorney. So far as the mayor knew, Pearson had no knowledge of Henry's arrest until he was called on the telephone by the chief of police.. The mayor stated that he talked to Mr. Pearson himself when the telephone call was made, and he told Mr. Pearson that he thought he should come down to the police station; that Pearson was reluctant to come to the police station for the reason that he had another appointment for the evening, but he came, as requested by the mayor, and questioned the boy Eilert and also the defendant Henry; and that he had a tape recorder which he used during the time he was questioning each of the parties.

The plaintiff Pearson, testifying in his own behalf, testified that Collins called him on the telephone at his home about 7:45 P. M. and told him that Aaron Henry had been arrested on a disorderly conduct charge, and Collins asked him to come to the city jail. Pearson stated that he knew nothing about the arrest of Henry until he received the call from the chief of police; that he and his wife had planned to go with another couple to a dance; but he went to the police station immediately. Kincade and Eilert were there when he arrived. He talked to Eilert, and he interrogated the defendant. Pearson stated that he had never seen Eilert before, and he knew nothing about him; and after talking to him he decided to get his tape recorder and take down all of the statement on the tape recorder. After taking statements from the parties, it appeared to him that no criminal offense had occurred in Coahoma County; and he therefore left the police station. He had never discussed with Collins or the boy Eilert a plot against Aaron Henry.

On cross-examination by the defendant's attorney, Pearson was asked, whether he ever, at any time, had occasion to question the defendant about his activities with the NAACP. In answer to that question Pearson stated that several months before the trial Henry and several other persons had been arrested and charged with conspiring to withhold trade from down-town merchants in Clarksdale; that prior to the arrest of the defendants on that charge he had talked to Henry and the others about the boycott and the law which made it a criminal offense for persons to conspire to commit acts injurious to public trade; that he told them that in his opinion the boycott was definitely injurious to public trade, and he felt that the boycott should cease, so that the city could have a normal Christmas trading season. Henry failed to heed his advice and admonition, and he made an affidavit against Henry for a violation of the law.

Stanny Sanders, an attorney of Greenwood, Mississippi, who had served as district attorney for the Fourth Judicial District for a period of 11 years and as Complaint Commissioner of the Mississippi State Bar, testified that in his opinion the charge that a county attorney and policeman had "concocted a diabolical plot" to bring about the arrest of a citizen on a morals charge would impute a crime to the county attorney, and even if unproved would injure his reputation and lower him in the public's esteem and confidence.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence the defendant was recalled to testify as a witness in his own behalf, and on direct examination by his attorney, the defendant was asked whether he had had any personal contacts with Mr. Pearson prior to March 3, 1962. In answer to that question, the defendant stated that, going back about three years, when Mr. Pearson was a candidate for county attorney, Mr. Pearson called on him to solicit his help in getting elected, and during the conversation which he had with Mr. Pearson at that time "it developed that Mr. Pearson and I were pretty wide apart about the rights of Negroes, and we couldn't come to any understanding as to whether we would support him or not." The defendant also stated that, at another time, when three young people were arrested for having decided that they could use any part of the local train station they desired, Mr. Pearson called him to his office to talk to him about that; and Mr. Pearson stated to him that the children would not have gone down there if they had not been encouraged by him and other adults. The defendant also recalled that on December 6, 1961, Mr. Pearson had Mr. Collins arrest him for an alleged violation of the anti-boycott statute. The defendant was later asked the following question, and gave the following answer: "Q. Now, based on the contact which you said you had with the plaintiff, Mr. Pearson, has it been your feeling that you were or were not being harassed by Mr. Pearson? A. I would say I have been harassed by him." The defendant stated that, when he wrote the letter to Mr. Norwood and made the statements to the newspaper reporters referred to above, he felt that some answer to the charge which had been made against him was necessary; that he was not mad at Mr. Pearson at the time he wrote the letter to Mr. Norwood and made the statements to the news agencies, and he was not mad at him at the time of the trial; but, since the crime was alleged to have been committed in Bolivar County, he felt that Mr. Pearson acted improperly in interrogating him in Coahoma County.

Four witnesses were called to testify on behalf of the defendant on the question whether the plaintiff had suffered actual damage to his reputation as a result of the publication of the libelous charge against him. H. Y. Hackett, an insurance agent of Clarksdale and J. M. McMillian, who operated a laundry in the City of Clarksdale, testified that they had read the newspaper article relating to the statement made by Henry concerning Mr. Pearson, and the article had not affected their opinions of Mr. Pearson. Reverend J. D. Rayford, who had lived in Clarksdale about 20 years, testified that he had read the article which appeared in the Clarksdale Register, and he did not think the article would cause any of Mr. Pearson's clients to refrain from employing him as an attorney. Dr. Luther McCaskill, a physician who lived in Clarksdale, also testified that he had read the article published in the Clarksdale newspaper, and it had not changed his opinion of Mr. Pearson; that it was his opinion that any statement Henry might have made about Mr. Pearson would have enhanced Mr. Pearson's reputation, because he was for integration and Mr. Pearson, like most people in the county, was a pro-segregationist.

We think there is no merit in the appellant's contention that the court erred in overruling the defendant's challenge of the juror L. R. Allen for cause.

The record shows that Allen on his voir dire examination stated that he was married, but had no children; that he was a member of the Christian Church; that he knew counsel for the plaintiff; and that Mr. L. L. Porter, Jr., was handling a case for his company at the time of the trial. The defendant's attorney challenged the juror for cause. Allen was then asked whether he could try the case fairly and impartially upon the law and evidence and that alone, and a just verdict return. His answer was that he could. He then stated that he had no malice or ill will against the defendant, and that he had no desire to reach any verdict except that verdict to which the evidence directed his mind. The court overruled the defendant's challenge of the juror for cause. The record shows that the court did not restrict defense counsel in any way in his examination of the other jurors. Each side exercised four peremptory challenges; and the juror Allen was not one of the jurors who tried the case. The company that Allen worked for was not a party to the suit; and in our opinion Allen was not disqualified to serve as a juror merely because one of the plaintiff's attorneys was representing his company in some other litigation at the time of the trial.

We also think there was no error in the action of the trial judge in overruling the defendant's motion for a directed verdict at the close of the plaintiff's case, or in the action of the trial judge in overruling the defendant's motion, at the conclusion of all of the evidence, for leave to amend his answer to the plaintiff's declaration so as to allege, as an additional defense, qualified privilege based on fair comment.

Similar errors were assigned and argued without avail as grounds for reversal of the judgment of the lower court in the Collins case, and what was said in the Collins case on the two points mentioned is applicable to the facts in this case.

In answer to the appellant's contention that he was entitled to a directed verdict in the Collins case, Judge Lee, after commenting upon the appellant's charge that his arrest was the result of a "diabolical plot" cooked up by Pearson and Collins, in his opinion said:

> "Thus, if human testimony is to be believed, there was no semblance of justification or excuse for the utterance and publication of these statements. It is evident that the purpose was to create a defense of the charge for which he was arrested and to do this by charging the appellee and the other officer with 'cooking up a diabolical plot' against him, meaning thereby that these officers were perjurers and had suborned others to perjure themselves. In other words, by this libel, these officers were charged with the commission of a loathsome and reprehensible crime, a crime so revolting as to produce hatred, contempt and ridicule, and to destroy credibility and degrade and lessen confidence and respect for them in the community. Such statements could spring only from wilfulness and malice or an utter disregard of all moral and ethical actions of human conduct. These statements were therefore libelous per se.

> "If actionable per se, general damages need not be pled or proved, but are presumed to result. Travis v. Hunt, 224 Miss. 193, 79 So. 2d 734; Natchez Times Pub. Company v. Dunigan, supra; and the cases with which those opinions are documented.
> "But malice was actually established in this case * * *.
> "Under the evidence, there was clearly such publication in the newspapers and by letter as to fasten liability upon the appellant. See 53 C.J.S., Libel and Slander, Sec. 85, p. 137, where it says in part: 'The author of the defamation is liable for any secondary publication which is the natural conse > quence of his act; and this rule applies both to libel and slander.' See also 33 Am. Jur., Libel and Slander, Sec. 197, p. 185, of like effect; Newell, Libel and Slander, 4th Ed., p. 339. Manifestly, the case, on the merits, was properly submitted to the jury, and the requested peremptory instruction was properly refused."

The appellant's contention that the court erred in overruling the appellant's motion for leave to amend his answer so as to allege as an additional defense qualified privilege based on fair comment, has likewise been fully answered in the opinion rendered in the Collins case; and it is not necessary that we repeat here what was said in the Collins case on that point.

One other question remains to be considered by us on this appeal, and that is the question whether or not the amount of damages awarded by the jury is so excessive as to require a reversal of the judgment and the granting of a new trial on that account. This Court has frequently stated that, in an action for libel or slander, the question as to the amount of damages to be awarded is peculiarly one for the jury. It is rarely the case that the compensatory damages to which the plaintiff is entitled in a case of this kind can be adequately measured by the extent of his pecuniary loss and, when malice is shown as in this case, exemplary damages may be awarded; and the amount of such damages awarded by the jury will not be disturbed by the court on appeal unless the amount is so excessive as to indicate bias or prejudice on the part of the jury.

The Court, in discussing the amount of the verdict in the Collins case, said:

> "Under the law, damage is presumed to result from a malicious libel and, of course, it followed from the publication of this malicious libel. Reckless negligence in the infliction of a personal injury would afford a remedy to the victim. As was said in > Jarnigan v. Fleming, supra (43 Miss. 710), 'Character is far more sacred than property, and should be protected by courts and juries with watchful care. Persons who injure the character of others, ought to be no less answerable to justice than those who injure property.' "

According to the evidence in this case the appellee was 32 years of age, was married and he and his wife had four children. The appellee graduated from Clarksdale High School in 1947. He attended University of Mississippi Law School thereafter, and obtained a law degree in 1951. He was admitted to the Bar and elected county attorney of Coahoma County in 1951, and served as county attorney for four years. He was defeated for reelection in 1955, but was again elected county attorney in 1959 for a second four-year term. His salary as county attorney was $4200 a year, and he expected to be a candidate for reelection in 1963. In addition to serving as county attorney, the appellant had been engaged in the general practice of law in the City of Clarksdale since 1952; and a large part of his practice had been derived from members of the colored race.

In view of the facts disclosed by the record we think that it cannot be said that the verdict in this case is so grossly excessive as to evince bias and prejudice on the part of the jury.

We find no reversible error in the record, and the judgment of the trial court is therefore affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF MISSISSIPPI

No. 42,759

AARON E. HENRY,

vs.

BENFORD C. COLLINS.

LEE, Presiding Justice:

This is a libel action, instituted by Benford C. Collins against Aaron E. Henry in the Circuit Court of Coahoma County, to recover damages on account of the publication of a false and defamatory charge against the plaintiff. There was a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $15,000, and the defendant has appealed.

The declaration charged that the defendant, on the 6th day of March 1962 maliciously prepared, composed and published a libelous writing to Mr. Norwood, Deputy Sheriff of Bolivar County, which contained a malicious libel against the plaintiff. It was also charged that the defendant, in like manner, made such charges to the United Press International News Bureau and the Associated Press News Bureau with express intent for these agencies to publish, republish, communicate, and circulate the statements among their subscribers throughout the State of Mississippi and the other states of the United States. Copies of the alleged false statements were attached to the declaration as exhibits. It was also alleged that these statements attributed to the plaintiff a gross violation of the law and his duties, and caused injury to him in his personal, social, official, business and professional life, thereby exposing him to public hatred, contempt and ridicule, with great damage to his reputation and good standing in the community.

The answer of the defendant admitted that he wrote the letter in question but that it was not maliciously prepared; and denied that the letter was false, defamatory and libelous. He likewise denied that he maliciously prepared and caused to be published the alleged communications to the press organizations and their subscribers; and denied that the plaintiff was injured in any way by reason of the publication.

Manuel Nasser, a Deputy Sheriff of Bolivar County and Deputy Marshal of the Town of Shelby, and Charlie Reynolds, a police officer of Clarksdale, on March 3, 1962, upon returning to the city hall in Shelby, after their efforts to locate a witness in a lawsuit, were accosted by Sterling Lee Eilert, who appeared to be scared, shaking and pale. He complained about an incident which had occurred in a black Star Chief Pontiac automobile, with a tag number ending in 1769, as he was hitchhiking from Memphis, Tennessee. These officers, in an effort to identify the automobile, called the Clarksdale Police Department, and were advised that Aaron Henry was the owner of a 1961 Pontiac automobile bearing License Tag No. C 14-1769. Eilert thereupon made an affidavit before V. E. Rowe, a Justice of the Peace, charging Henry with disorderly conduct. The Justice of the Peace issued a warrant for the arrest of Henry on that charge and delivered it to Reynolds for transmission to the authorities in Clarksdale. When the warrant was received at Clarksdale, the plaintiff, the Chief of Police, went to the defendant's home and advised him that he was under arrest on a charge of disorderly conduct and gave him a copy of the warrant. When Collins delivered his prisoner to the city jail, Mayor W. S. Kincade, who was at the police station, talked to Eilert, and directed Collins to call the County Attorney, Pearson, to come to the city hall for the purpose of an interrogation. With great reluctance, because he was preparing to go to a social activity, the county attorney went to the city hall and talked to the parties in order to ascertain where the alleged crime had actually occurred. To that end, he took tape recordings of the statements of Eilert, Clifford Smith, Noelle Henry, wife of the appellant, and appellant himself. When he had concluded the interrogation, the county attorney was of the opinion that no criminal offense had been committed in Coahoma County. The appellant was then turned over to Bolivar County officials.

On March 6, two days after his release, appellant wrote the letter complained about to Deputy Sheriff Norwood. Because of its length, the same is not set out verbatim. However, it advised the officer that he had filed a complaint with the Department of Justice, charging a denial of civil rights because of his arrest. Henry stated that the arrest "was born in the minds of the county attorney and the chief of police due to his activity" in certain areas. The letter told the officer that "I am not charging nor am I of the opinion that you nor any other authority of Bolivar County is a party to this diabolical plot. I do think that the two men above-mentioned (the county attorney and the chief of police) have schemed with some person to make the charge in Bolivar County" etc.

The statements which the defendant made to United Press International and the Associated Press, on the same date as the letter, were prepared by the appellant and read over the telephone to the representatives of the two press agencies. In each instance, defendant referred to his arrest on the charge of making immoral advances toward a male person in a claim that this was an attempt to discredit him. He called the arrest "a diabolical plot cooked up" by Coahoma County Attorney Pearson and Clarksdale Police Officer Ben Collins. The representatives of the press agencies, in each instance testified that the appellant expressed the desire to read the statement to them, that he did so, and that they were particularly careful to write down his exact language. These statements were forwarded to subscribers and were published in the Clarksdale Press Register, the Biloxi-Gulfport Daily Herald, the Daily Corinthian, the Delta Democrat Times, and the Vicksburg Evening Post.

The appellant, forty years of age and a pharmacist, admitted that he wrote the letter to Mr. Norwood. He knew that the press agencies gathered and carried news items over the country, as he had previously given items to them. He admitted that he used the two words "diabolical plot" in his letter. But, in an effort to explain his use of the words in the letter and statement, he said that they constituted his opinion of what the acts amounted to, and they were not uttered as a result of malice. He admitted that he had experienced several other clashes with the law. His witnesses said that they believed that the appellant would tell the truth, but they did not think the publications resulted in any harm to the appellee.

The evidence showed that neither Nasser nor Pearson had ever seen Eilert prior to the time that he approached them in Shelby, and, successively, in the city hall at Clarksdale. Collins knew nothing of the events in Shelby until the message was received over the radio that a warrant had been issued for appellant's arrest. The evidence showed positively that no one had framed the defendant or "cooked up" any plot, diabolical or otherwise, to have him arrested on a morals charge. There was no contact between Collins and Pearson until Mayor Kincade directed Collins to call Pearson and tell him to come to the city hall.

The appellant assigns a number of alleged errors as grounds for a reversal, and these will be taken up and disposed of in the order in which they may be listed.

On the question of whether or not the appellant was entitled to a peremptory instruction at the close of the case, a proper evaluation of the evidence is as follows:

Some of the meanings of the expression "cook up", from their common acceptation, are "to make up: devise or fabricate often factitiously as an expedient: prepare, concoct, improvise—usu. used with up * * *" and "to alter to convey an untrue impression: falsify, doctor, angle, manipulate." Webster's 3rd New International Dictionary, Unabridged.

"Diabolical", in like manner, may mean "Of or relating to the devil or devils: being under the influence of devils: resembling a devil: devilish, fiendish." Webster's 3rd New International Dictionary, Unabridged.

"Plot", in like manner, may mean "conspiracy, intrigue." Webster's 3rd New International Dictionary, Unabridged.

Thus, if human testimony is to be believed, there was no semblance of justification or excuse for the utterance and publication of these statements. It is evident that the purpose was to create a defense of the charge for which he was arrested and to do this by charging the appellee and the other officer with "cooking up a diabolical plot" against him, meaning thereby that these officers were perjurers and had suborned others to perjure themselves. In other words, by this libel, these officers were charged with the commission of a loathsome and reprehensible crime, a crime so revolting as to produce hatred, contempt and ridicule, and to destroy credibility and degrade and lessen confidence and respect for them in the community. Such statements could spring only from wilfulness and malice or an utter disregard of all moral and ethical actions of human conduct. These statements were therefore libelous per se.

In Conroy v. Breland, et al., 185 Miss. 787, 189 So. 814, the opinion said: "At common law any written or printed language which tends to injure one's reputation, and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt or ridicule, degrade him in society, lessen him in public esteem or lower him in the confidence of the community is actionable per se. Hodges v. Cunningham, 160 Miss. 576, 581, 135 So. 215; Wrought Iron Range Company v. Boltz, 123 Miss. 550, 558, 86 So. 354; and no special damages are necessary to be alleged or shown in order to prevail against a demurrer, or a motion to exclude. 3 Rest., Torts, Sec. 569. The statement of the rule, as set forth in this paragraph, must not be confused with that more precisely applicable to slander or oral defamations, and must, of course, be taken in connection with the further rule, prevailing in this State, that the truth of the matter alleged to be defamatory, whether in slander or in libel, is a good defense. Neely v. Payne, 126 Miss. 854, 89 So. 669; 36 C. J., pp. 1231, 1232, and cases there cited."

The Hodges and Boltz cases, cited in the above quotation, as well as Hines v. Shumaker, 97 Miss. 669, 52 So. 705, fully document the above statement. In Hines v. Shumaker, supra, the Court said:

"Appellant sought by their pleadings and proof to qualify the language of the letter, by pleading and endeavoring to prove that the letter did not charge, and was not intended to charge, generally, dishonesty to the plaintiff. But the question for the court to determine is, not what language the appellants meant to use, but what did they mean by the language actually employed?" See also Great A. & P. Tea Company v. Majure, 176 Miss. 356, 167 So. 637; and Natchez Times Pub. Company v. Dunigan, 221 Miss. 320, 72 So. 2d 631, the latter also pointing out that, the article being libelous per se, malicious intent is not even necessary to sustain the action, citing Jarnigan v. Fleming, 43 Miss. 710; Rodgers v. Kline, 56 Miss. 808; Upton v. Times Pub. Company, 104 La. 141, 28 So. 970.

If actionable per se, general damages need not be pled or proved, but are presumed to result. Travis v. Hunt, 224 Miss. 193, 79 So. 2d 734; Natchez Times Pub. Company

v. Dunigan, supra; and the cases with which those opinions are documented.

But malice was actually established in this case. See Kroger Gro. & Bak. Company v. Harpole, 175 Miss. 227, 166 So. 335, where it was said: "Malice in fact relates to the state or condition of the mind of a person who speaks defamatory words. It includes an intention to injure, hatred, or ill will, but is not limited thereto, and appears if words of the character here under consideration were spoken wantonly and in disregard of a civil obligation, i.e., if they were spoken recklessly without knowing or caring whether they were true. This is in accord with practically all of the authorities." See also Reliance Mfg. Company v. Graham, 181 Miss. 549, 179 So. 341.

Under the evidence, there was clearly such publication in the newspapers and by letter as to fasten liability upon the appellant. See 53 C.J.S., Libel and Slander, Sec. 85, p. 137, where it says in part: "The author of the defamation is liable for any secondary publication which is the natural consequence of his act; and this rule applies both to libel and slander." See also 33 Am. Jur., Libel and Slander, Sec. 197, p. 185, of like effect; Newell, Libel and Slander, 4th Ed., p. 339. Manifestly, the case, on the merits, was properly submitted to the jury, and the requested peremptory instruction was properly refused.

On Objection to Dictionary Definition of Words

In the course of the appellant's cross-examination, he was asked to read a dictionary definition of "diabolic" and "plot". The objection was that the meaning in question was what the witness, not what someone else, understood it to be. The witness read from the book the definition of "diabolic" and confirmed also the meaning of "plot" therein, saying in each instance that those were definitions. He was asked if he wished to pick out others, but he declined to do so; nor did he offer his own accepted definition for those words.

This Court has recognized that, under the Anti-Dueling Statute, Sec. 1059, Code of 1942, Rec., the words there contemplated are "from their usual construction and common acceptation * * * considered as insults, and calculated to lead to a breach of the peace * * *". Huckabee v. Nash, 182 Miss. 754, 183 So. 500, and Salvo v. Edens, 237 Miss. 734, 116 So. 2d 220.

In cross-examination, a wide latitude is allowed. The examiner, in this instance, was trying to ascertain the appellant's understanding of the words. The appellant, however, advanced nothing to the contrary. There is no complaint that the court used a dictionary definition in the instructions to the jury. Of course that cannoot be done. Jarnigan v. Fleming, supra, so held.

It therefore follows that the objection to this examination was without merit.

THE MOTION TO QUASH THE JURY PANEL

The appellant, on this motion, placed on the stand three supervisors and the chancery clerk of the county in an effort to show discrimination, because of race, in selecting, drawing and empaneling jurors. But these witnesses, with one accord, testified that there had been no discrimination whatever in the selection, drawing and empaneling of jurors as regards the white and Negro races; that they selected "qualified persons of good intelligence, sound judgment, and fair character" in strict conformity with Sec. 1756, Code of 1942, Rec.; and that there were no marks to indicate in any way the color of the potential jurors. Besides, six Negroes, registered and qualified persons, used as witnesses by the appellant, testified that they had been called for jury service several times in past years, and that others of like color were on the jury panels at those times. One witness testified that he remembered that eight or ten Negroes were called on the panel at one term last year. The trial judge stated into the record that he had been the presiding judge of that court since January 1943; that, to his knowledge, Negroes had not been systematically kept off of juries; and that the court had empaneled them on both grand and petit juries since he had been judge. He mentioned cases when Negroes actually sat on the panel in trials. He either drew the names of the jurors, or they were drawn by the statutory officers, when he did not perform this service, and that there was no instance of failing to select, or of excluding, Negroes because of their race. There had always been quite a number of such names in the boxes.

In other words, the evidence wholly failed to show any discrimination against Negroes in the selection and empaneling of jurors. And so, as it was said in Wilson v. State, 243 Miss. 859, 140 So. 2d 275, at page 867:

"Appellant, therefore, did not meet his burden. His witnesses proved that the converse of his motion was true." See also Akins v. Texas, 325 U. S. 398, 65 S. Ct. 1276, 89 L. Ed. 692, and cases there cited. Cf. also Hernandez v. Texas, 347 U. S. 475, 74 S. Ct. 667, 98 L. Ed. 866; Kennard v. State, 242 Miss. 691, 128 So. 2d 572.

This Court in Cameron v. State, 233 Miss. 404, 102 So. 2d 355, observed that it was a matter of common knowledge that the supervisors, in most of the counties in the state, since the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Patton v. Mississippi, 332 U. S. 463, 68 S. Ct. 184, 186, 92 L. Ed. 76, have been placing the names of qualified Negroes in the jury boxes. Cf. also Goldsby v. State, 240 Miss. 647, 123 So. 2d 429 (1960), cert. den., 365 U. S. 861, 81 S. Ct. 829, 5 L. Ed. 2d 824, where a change of venue was granted because of lack of names of Negroes in the jury boxes in the county where the crime was committed.

Manifestly the court correctly overruled the motion to quash the panel of jurors on account of the alleged discrimination against selection of Negroes for jury service.

OVERRULING MOTION FOR MISTRIAL ON ACCOUNT OF ARGUMENT TO JURY BY COUNSEL FOR APPELLEE

The appellant contends that the court committed reversible error in its refusal to grant him a mistrial because of alleged prejudicial argument by counsel for appellee in the closing address to the jury. The record discloses the statements and the actions thereon as follows:

"Sullivan: 'If they put that white boy out on the highway, how in the world did they know that Aaron Henry was going to come by? I don't know. How in the world did they know a Pontiac was going to come down that highway being driven by Aaron Henry? Yet Aaron Henry himself said 'I picked him up on the highway.'

"(Loud murmur in courtroom.)

"Semmes Luckett: Your Honor, I will ask that the courtroom be cleared.

"Court: Mr. Sheriff, I am not going to have that kind of thing going on in this courtroom. Is there a motion to clear the courtroom?

"Charles Sullivan: No, sir, not as long as it doesn't reoccur.

"Court: I want to announce that no person shall open their mouth again, regardless of who they are. This is the first time a thing like this has happened in the 23 years that I have been on the bench. Mr. Sheriff, stand out there and if a single person bats an eyelash I want them brought up here. Proceed with your argument, Mr. Sullivan.

(The record does not show that any objection whatever was made by counsel for appellant to the language which had been used or to what had occurred at that time.)

"Sullivan: 'Do you know what punitive damages are, and compensatory damages, for that matter? They are a by-product of our civilization. There was a period in man's history when if someone had said what Aaron Henry said about Ben Collins, there would have been a homicide that night—somebody would have gotten killed. There was a time in Mississippi when that would have happened. If Aaron Henry had accused this man of being a dirty crook, there was a time when there would have been a killing that night.

"Jack H. Young: We object, your Honor.

"Court: I sustain the objection.

"Charles L. Sullivan: I think that is a proper statement, your Honor.

"Jack H. Young: I would like to make a motion, your Honor, for a mistrial.

"Court: I overrule the motion for a mistrial, but let the record show that I am instructing the jury to disregard that statement. Continue with your argument."

The speaker then resumed his argument, and, from the context, it is clear that he was undertaking to explain the differences between punitive, and compensatory, damages. He asserted that punitive damages are a by-product of our civilization, saying that "There was a period in man's history when if someone had said what Aaron Henry said about Ben Collins, there would have been a homicide that night—somebody would have gotten killed. There was a time in Mississippi when that would have happened. If Aaron Henry had accused this man of being a dirty crook, there was a time when there would have been a killing that night." This reference was evidently to the pioneer days of the country when a man, who felt that his honor had been questioned, arrogated to himself the right to be his own avenger. Dueling was commonly practiced, not only in this state, but in other parts of this country. A noteworthy instance is the well-known duel between Burr and Hamilton. In an effort to suppress this evil, the Legislature of the state enacted the so-called Dueling Statute, Sec. 1059, Code of 1942, Rec., making "All words which, from their usual construction and common acceptation, are considered as insults, and calculated to lead to a breach of the peace * * * actionable." Huckabee v. Nash, 182 Miss. 754, 183 So. 500; Salvo v. Edens, 237 Miss. 734, 116 So. 2d 220; as heretofore stated.

Since the first statement of counsel was not objected to at all during the trial and was first raised in appellant's brief in this Court, the objection is without merit. In Robertshaw Trustees v. Columbus & G. Ry. Co., 185 Miss. 717, 188 So. 308, it was said: "In order to put the trial court in error, it must be shown not only that there was error but that the error or errors were committed by the court after a fair and definitely presented opportunity was given to avoid or correct them." See also Stevenson v. Robinson, 37 So. 2d 568 (Miss.); Lyle v. Johnson, 240 Miss. 154, 126 So. 2d 266.

The basis of the rule against argumentative appeals to racial prejudice, in its full extent, is stated in Hampton v. State, 88 Miss. 257, 40 So. 545, as follows: "Mulattoes, negroes, Malays, whites, millionaires, paupers, princes, and kings, in the courts of Mississippi, are on precisely the same exactly equal footing. All must be tried on facts, and not on abuse. Only impartial trials can pass the Red Sea of this court without drowning. Trials are to vindicate innocence or ascertain guilt, and are not to be vehicles for denunciation." And in Harris v. State, 96 Miss. 379, 50 So. 626, it was said: "Every defendant at the bar of his country, white or black, must be accorded a fair trial according to the law of the land, and that law knows no color." In the first instance, the sale of liquor was charged.

Objection to the prejudicial argument went unrebuked by the court, and exceptions were properly taken. In the second instance, the defendant, a Negro, was being tried on the charge of assault, with intent to murder a white man. Counsel protested and objected five times about the prejudicial remarks, but the same were ignored by the trial judge.

Insofar as his contention on the second statement is concerned, the appellant relies on seven cases from this jurisdiction, namely, Hardaway v. State, 99 Misc. 223, 54 So. 833; Moseley v. State, 112 Miss. 854, 73 So. 791; Garner v. State, 120 Misc. 744, 83 So. 83; Walton v. State, 147 Miss. 17, 112 So. 601; Roby v. State, 147 Miss. 575, 113 So. 185; Harris v. State, 209 Miss. 141, 46 So. 2d 91; Reed v. State, 99 So. 2d 455 (Miss.).

A study of these cases shows that, in every instance, except one, the defendants were Negroes and the State witnesses were Whites. In the Garner case, supra, although the victim of the rape was a young Negro girl, the exhortation to the jury by the prosecuting attorney was that they should not turn loose a brute of the defendant's race on the community.

Besides, in each instance there was an express appeal to racial prejudice, and the veracity of the witnesses, both Negroes and Whites, was expressly pitted against each other. In each case there were objections to the pungent arguments and appeals to prejudice by the prosecuting attorneys. In every case the trial judges either overruled the objections or declined or failed to rule on them at all. They did not disapprove or condemn such arguments nor did they admonish or direct the juries to disregard the same. Thus the judges did not, in any way, seek to effect the erasure of such prejudicial matters from the minds of the jurors.

Manifestly the cases, which the appellant has cited, are not indicative of what the court should hold in the present case. In this case, when the objection was made, the trial judge promptly sustained it. When counsel then moved for a mistrial, the court overruled it but directed that the record should show that "I am instructing the jury to disregard" the speaker's statement. In the absence of the exact words which the judge used for that purpose, it must be assumed that they fully covered the matter.

This Court has recognized that, when an objection is made to arguments and the same is sustained by the court, usually the ill effect of the statement, if any, is corrected. In the case of Herrin v. State, 201 Miss. 595, 29 So. 2d 452, a manslaughter case, the district attorney, in his closing remarks to the jury, said: " 'Gentlemen of the jury you can acquit the defendant on this charge and let him go free, and if you do he may kill another person, and the next time it may not be a colored person,' to which the defendant 'duly objected, and which objection the court duly sustained.' " The court, in dealing with this objection, said that "we are of the opinion that while the remarks of the district attorney constituted an appeal to race prejudice, and should not have been made, the action of the trial court in promptly sustaining an objection thereto was sufficient to prevent his overruling of the motion for a mistrial from constituting a reversible error, under all the facts and circumstances of this case." See also Pitts v. State, 211 Miss. 268, 51 So. 2d 448, an appeal from a life sentence; Thomas v. State, 200 Miss. 220, 26 So. 2d 469, a manslaughter case; Moon v. State, 176 Miss. 72, 168 So. 476, a death sentence; Bufkin v. State, 134 Miss. 116, 98 So. 455; Cavanah v. The State, 56 Miss. 299.

In the Pitts case, supra, dealing with the five statements in the bill of exceptions as improper but not sufficient to cause a reversal, the Court said: "After each of the statements, the court sustained objections to it. The cumulative effect on a jury of the trial judge's sustaining a defendant's objection to argument and after admonishing the state's attorney to stay within the evidence usually has the effect of curing the improper conduct and prejudicing the state's rather than the defendant's case." In the

Thomas case, supra, in overruling the claim of prejudice from the alleged injection of the racial issue into the case, the Court said: "The record shows that when the irregularities occurred the court not only sustained the objections made to them, but in each case the court expressly admonished the jury to disregard the matter of which the complaints were made; and this direct admonition to the jury by the court was sufficient to cure the improper conduct."

All of the cases show that the evil inveighed against in prejudicial argument of this kind is the appeal to racial prejudice and the arrayal of White against Negro.

The statement here under review cannot be held either to intend, or to produce, that result. In the explanation of punitive damages, counsel was merely saying that people in this state and country do not settle alleged reflections on their honor as they did in the old days. On the contrary the law recognizes the existence of injuries on that account, and provides for retribution in a lawful way by the award of damages without resort to six-guns or violence. Such was the purpose of the Anti-Dueling Statute. Whether this fact of history is known to the great masses of the people or not, at least the change in the method of settling such affairs is now known because the original practice has been greatly mitigated. Jurors in the county where this trial occurred are required to be men "of good intelligence, sound judgment and fair character."

There would be no difference between saying "if the defendant had done this to the plaintiff" and in saying "if Aaron Henry had done this act to Ben Collins." There simply was no appeal to racial prejudice.

The trial judge, out of an abundance of caution, sustained the objection and instructed the jury to disregard the statement of counsel. If it could, by the wildest stretch of the imagination, be said that any harm had resulted, manifestly such harm must have been eradicated from the minds of the jurors.

There is this added fact in connection with this assignment: The appellant made no claim in his motion for a new trial that he should be awarded this relief because of error in the refusal to grant a mistrial based on prejudicial argument to the jury by counsel for appellee.

The trial court had no opportunity whatever to review, following the completed trial, his action in that particular matter. This Court has repeatedly held that, unless the point is preserved in the motion for a new trial, the contention that the verdict is contrary to the great weight of the evidence cannot be reviewed here. Youngblood v. State, 216 Miss. 202, 62 So. 2d 218, and authorities there cited. Prejudicial evidence and prejudicial arguments are so closely akin that they should be treated in the same manner. There is no reason why the same rule should not be applicable to both. If one is to profit from the failure of the court to overrule a motion for a mistrial because of prejudicial argument, such point should be preserved by including it in the motion for a new trial. Inasmuch as it had not been heard of until its assignment in this Court, it must therefore be viewed as an afterthought. Consequently there was no error on the part of the court in this respect.

The Refusal of the Court to Permit the Filing of a Plea of Qualified Privilege

After the appellee had rested his case, the appellant asked leave to amend his answer and set forth the defense of qualified privilege, based on fair comment. This motion was denied on the ground that it had been filed too late. Be that as it may, however, the measurable privilege of publications, dealing with public officials, requires that such publications must be within the bounds of fair comment and must not be motivated by actual malice.

In the case of Krebs v. McNeal, 222 Miss. 560, 76 So. 2d 693, at p. 576 of the State Report, 76 So. 2d 699, this Court cited and quoted from 33 Am. Jur., Libel and Slander, Sec. 169, pp. 161-164, as follows: "Although there are a few decisions to the contrary, the great weight of authority supports the view that publications dealing with political matters, public officers, and candidates for office are entitled to a measurable privilege by reason of the public interest involved therein. The principal limitations upon the rule are that the statements must be within the bounds of fair comment and must not be motivated by actual malice * * *. The rule does not, however, place such persons wholly without the protection of the law, and although there is authority to the contrary, it is generally held that accusations of crime, dishonesty, fraud, corruption, immorality, etc., and imputations of dereliction of duty, favoritism, or misconduct in office, are not privileged." See also Edmonds v. Delta Democrat Publishing Company, 230 Miss. 583, 93 So. 2d 171; Scott-Burr Stores Corporation v. Edgar, 181 Miss. 486, 177 So. 766; Kroger Grocery & Baking Company v. Harpole, supra; Louisiana Oil Corporation v. Tenno, 173 Miss. 609, 157 So. 705; Hodges v. Cunningham, 160 Miss. 577, 135 So. 215; Hines v. Shumaker, supra. Likewise, the Law of Torts, Harper and James, p. 457, is to the effect that proof of actual malice defeats the qualified immunity of fair comment.

The statements in this case accused the appellee of being guilty of crimes. There was no evidence to sustain such a charge. The appellant, who was called by the appellee as an adverse witness in the presentation of his case, had, in no way, offered any suggestion of a qualified privilege under the theory of fair comment. Consequently, such a defense would have been without avail. The appellant therefore could have suffered no injury whatever from the denial of his motion in this particular.

THE RESTRICTION OF LIBEL INFRINGES THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH

This contention is utterly untenable. The authorities are legion as to the right to call a person, guilty of malicious libel, into account for his defamation. The Supreme Court of the United States in Konigsberg v. State Bar of California, 366 U. S. 36, 81 S. Ct. 997, 6 L. Ed. 2d 105, said that the First Amendment is not an absolute. See also Near v. Minnesota, 283 U. S. 697, 51 S. Ct. 625, 75 L. Ed. 1357.

THE AMOUNT OF THE VERDICT

The appellant contends that the verdict in this case is grossly excessive and evinces passion and prejudice. Under the law, damage is presumed to result from a malicious libel and, of course, it followed from the publication of this malicious libel. Reckless negligence in the infliction of a personal injury would afford a remedy to the victim. As was said in Jarnigan v. Fleming, supra, "Character is far more sacred than property, and should be protected by courts and juries with watchful care. Persons who injure the character of others, ought to be no less answerable to justice than those who injure property."

When the words are prompted by malice, punitive or exemplary damages may be awarded. Kroger Gro. & Bk. Company v. Harpole, supra; Interstate Company v. Garnett, 154 Misc. 325, 122 So. 373; Gardner v. Martin, 123 Misc. 218, 85 So. 182; 53 C. J. S., Libel and Slander, Sec. 260 b., p. 373. In the Garnett case, supra, this Court let $15,000 of a verdict of $25,000 stand, although in that case it was necessary for the jury to determine, because of the susceptibility of two potential meanings of the words, whether or not the particular words were slanderous. Too, that case was decided in 1929 when dollars had greater purchasing value. In that case, there was proof as to the financial worth of the appellant, whereas there is no evidence on that phase of the case in the present record. But this Court cannot be blamed for lack of that information.

When published statements are considered and reduced to writing, there is study and concentration on the subject matter. This clearly establishes deliberate intent, evincing malice if the same is false. On the contrary, a sudden loss of temper may be the reason for the utterance of a defamatory statement. For that reason, it may be that a jury would be impelled to award a larger verdict for injuries flowing from libel than from slander.

According to the evidence, the appellee was thirty-two years of age, married and the father of one child. He was a dedicated officer, having been engaged in the important occupation of law enforcement since 1956. He was striving to make a successful life career in that phase of human endeavor. His salary at the time was $600 per month. He had noted ill effects and symbols as a result of the defamation, and these were not restricted to the local area.

The Court is unaware of any rule whereby it can justly reduce the amount of this verdict which was solemnly adjudged by the jury. That being true, the Court is not in position to say that the verdict is grossly excessive or that it evinces passion or prejudice on the part of the jury.

The Court finds no reversible error in the case and the judgment of the trial court must therefore be affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

FBI Investigation Asked
NAACP PRESIDENT RAPS 'PLOT' BY OFFICERS

Aaron Henry, state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Tuesday night he had asked the FBI to investigate his arrest Saturday on a morals charge.

Henry issued a statement saying he had filed a formal complaint with the Justice Department charging his civil rights had been violated by officers from nearby Bolivar County and Clarksdale.

He was arrested Saturday night by Clarksdale Police Chief Ben Collins on a Bolivar County warrant charging him with disturbing the peace by allegedly making immoral advances to an 18-year-old white youth.

Henry called the arrest "a diabolical plot cooked up" by the Coahoma County prosecutor, Thomas H. Pearson, and Collins.

The warrant charges that the incident occurred Saturday when he allegedly picked up the white youth hitchhiking from Memphis to Cleveland, Mississippi.

He said it was "legally inconceivable that he could be charged with any crime taking place outside the city limits of Clarksdale" last Saturday and that he had "unimpeachable witnesses to prove his whereabouts at all times."

Henry's complaint questioned his arrest by city officers, and he said that Coahoma Sheriff L. A. Ross "could never have been persuaded to go along with such a plot."

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Clarksdale, Miss., March 6—(AP)—Aaron Henry, 39-year-old State President of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Tuesday night he had filed a complaint with the Justice Department charging violation of his civil rights.

Henry claimed the violation came in his arrest on charges of disturbing the peace. Bolivar County Atty. Frank Wynne had said the charges grew out of "obscene advances on a male person."

The arrest, Henry said, was an attempt to discredit him, the NAACP and the "Negro freedom movement in Clarksdale and Coahoma County."

He charged the arrest was "a diabolical plot cooked up" by Coahoma County Atty. T. H. Pearson and Clarksdale Police Chief Ben Collins. Henry added that Sheriff L. A. Ross of Coahoma County must "have been bypassed in the plot. The sheriff does not agree with out movement but also won't sell himself to do such a thing."

"It is my opinion," Henry said, "Whatever the charge is—it has been concocted between certain city and county officials. It is not going to slow our work down."

He has led a campaign to get merchants to stop referring to Negroes as "nigger" and "boy" and to get Negroes jobs above menial labor.

Henry said officials weren't specific as to when the act occurred, but said they asked him where he was between 5 and 6 P.M. Saturday.

Henry said he had his car washed between 10 A.M. and 5:20 P.M. Saturday and never left Clarksdale. He was supposed to have picked up an 18-year-old white hitchhiker from Memphis in Mound Bayou and made unnatural advances.

Henry was arrested Saturday night in Clarksdale and later released on $1,000.00 bond. He said the bond he signed did not have the charge written down.

He also questioned the authority and validity of the charge because Coahoma County Atty. T. H. Pearson told him Bolivar County authorities reported the offense to city authorities rather than County.

"It's unusual," he said, "that the Bolivar County Sheriff came to the city hall here to report the charge instead of to the Coahoma County Sheriff."

Henry said his attorney, R. Jess Brown of Jackson, had not been advised when a trial would be held.

Dear Mr. Norwood:

First I want to thank you for the fair manner in which I was treated while in your coustdy as a prisoner on Saturday Night March 3rd, 1962. Except for our discussion concerning the hand cuffs and the body chain there was no other difficulties of which I am appreciative.

You will probably see in print where I have filed a complaint with the Justice Department charging a denial of Civil Rights in the arrest itself. The complaint states that in my opinion the charge under which I was arrested was born in the minds of the County Attorney and the Chief of Police of my town due to my activity in the area of Desegregation, Registering and Voting and politics as I serve on the committed of the Trammell to Congress Committee, sponsorning a Negro for Congress. Also these two men are against me due to my activity in suggesting to Negroes that we all trade in those stores thay employ us and hire us above the menial level.

What I want to be clearly understood that I am not charging nor am I of the opinion that you nor any other authority of Bolivar County is a party to this diabolical plot. I do think that the two men above mentioned has schemed with some person to make the charge in Bolivar County and unknowingly Bolivar County is being used to some extent as a party in the Racial difficulties of Coahoma County. I believe that Coahoma County should contain its own racial strife and not schemingly get other counties involved in our own difficulties.

Incidentally when I recieved my personals from the jail at Cleveland my address books was missing. I would like to know if you can tell me what procedure I can or should use to get it back as there are some persons in the book I would like to keep in touch with.

Again I say a personal thanks to you.
